

So they all got together. So they all started back. Anyway, he had already married his daughter-in-law. He had been living with her in that camp.

They start back from there. By the time they got home they had a little baby. And when they got back over here, these people said, "Hey, Sainday, you married your daughter-in-law!" And he said, "It's all right. Don't make fun. It's all right." Ever since then people sure have been razzing Sainday about marrying his daughter-in-law!

And this other one, he is talking about where his arm--Sainday's arm--came off. Maybe through that--his punishment or something. He lost his arm.

And that's what you see. That--what is it? Is it a dipper, what you call it up among them stars?

(Big Dipper Constellation.)

He said that's what it is, he says. That's Able's.

DRIED-UP-SNOT BOY AND SAINDAY BOTH TRY TO MARRY CHIEF'S DAUGHTER AND SNOT BOY WINS

He said Sainday came up to a camp. And there was a nest way on top of a tree somewhere. And this man wanted somebody to knock this nest down. It was pretty birds up there, you know--an eagle or something, and they wanted those feathers. And everybody been trying to knock it off, and nobody could. So, he said, "Well, I'll do it." So there was another camp by.

And it was an old lady. She takes care of her grandson. And he was really just filthy, you know. His snot's always just hanging down just dried in here, and he's just bushy-headed. And this little boy said, "Grandma, I'm going to try. Whoever knocks that nest down, that man said could marry my daughter. She is real pretty." So this boy told his grandma, he said,

"Grandma, I'm going to try it." And that woman said, "No! We're pitiful, and you're pitiful. Nobody would want to marry a boy like you." And he
