

off, they was on horseback, hunting days for buffalo, you know. He killed one, he killed two. Then he got brush, you know, brush, you know. Then he said, "I'm going back over there to skin the first, you know. Then I'll take him home and come back, and you watch this one." he told him. He cut the brush, you know, he walked around there and brushed off the flies, the flies, you know. "Don't let them get worms in it." So he did. This fellow walked around; and he had the brush with him, you know, and turned around, and kept the flies off of them buffalo that was dead, you know. But tis other one, he wanted to go back home, skin this other buffalo first and then take him back home. Oh, he was about two days. Kept walking around, you know, and this fellow he was kind of half crazy you know, and that's why they kind of left him off. When he got back home, why this fellow when they dance you know he thought he was a big shot you know and the other fellows said, "Now you lay down over here and we dance." So he lay down and all these other fellows danced, and then they just step on him you know cause his brother was gone, that's why they put him on the ground and danced step on him, because his brother was gone you know. Oh, sometimes in the early morning this fellow went back and looked for his brother. He started off and took his horse with him and find his brother still walking around that buffalo, you know. With the brush, you know. He brought him home, they got home right after about dark, you know, they all was going to start dance again. So he cut a stick about as big as my cane, you know, he said, "When the dance going on to-night, you come over tonight. When they dance you know if they do anything with me, get in there and whip all them people in there." So
