

it shows the head. Right on the bare part of that. Because I heard one party say, "Well," he said, "you fed me the turkey necks now. I had the other part so I'm going to the camp and eat with you." A lot of times if they have somebody sit there..if I had a brother-in-law that was sitting there all dressed up, I could take his hat or handkerchief or anything that he had on you know. A lot of times a particular party after they've danced together, why they take them to the stand and give them a treat or something. That's the way it used to be. We had a lot of fun. Some men were roaming and you had to chase them.

(Did the man have to get the treat for the woman?)

Yes, uhuh.

DANCE COSTUMES:

(There are some questions I want to ask you too about the costumes because the people that listen to this won't have seen them so I want to describe the costumes as much as we could. One of the questions I wanted to ask you is that I noticed that some of the dresses had short sleeves. Is that the way the traditional costume is?)

No, it's supposed to be long sleeved like Sally's dress.

(What about the length of the ribbons that the women wore?)

They're supposed to be all even with the dress up to the ankle because they bend their mocassin tops you know. Show a little below the ankles could be above. But for a child, they don't have to have them long. Just half way and then the ribbons are supposed to be the same length as the dress.

(What about the comb? How should the women wear their comb?)

Well, the comb and that butterfly headress comes even.

(Is the top of the butterfly headress supposed to be even with the top