

rooster. He's just making all that noise, and open up his feathers. Boy, he said it was just wonderful! It was just daylight. Kinda just coming light. (Who was that, Captain?)

Captain.

EAGLE FEATHERS, REASON FOR USING THEM

(Well, you started to tell us about the eagle feathers--why they use eagle feathers.)

Well, menfolks--what I mean is, outstanding--respectable mens such as chiefs, spokesmen, people that's out--kinda leader-like---they like to use them eagle feathers. It's one of the highest among all birds. Flies way up there---day-time. That's the way Indians look at it. Eagle feathers.

(Do they still use them in peyote fans?)

Oh yeah (brings out his own eagle feather fans to show). I had it long time.

(Evelyn: He finally had it fixed into ---, huh.)

(How beautiful! What kind of eagle is this?)

Bald eagle (feathers are snow white)

(Where'd you get these feathers?)

Apache Ben had that (the feathers), I don't know how long.

(Who made the fan?)

Max Silverhorn. Here's another eagle here--(displaying another fan)

(How long have you had this one?)

That belongs to Howard (Neconie).

(Did he make it?)

Yeah.

(What kind of feathers does he use up here at the tips? ((meaning small feathers attached to ends of the large ones and brightly colored))

(Evelyn: Well, he uses mostly chicken feathers but he colors them himself. He uses some kind of a dye--I don't know what kind that must be--but he always have all different colors.)

(Does he use this fan himself?)

(Evelyn: well, yes. It was his--he use it a lot and then Taff borrowed it about a year ago--Taff Heintigh--and he went after it not too long ago before he went to
