

he said. "Save it for your wife and her other husband. When you die your wife's gonna get married--gonna spend your money!")

Gonna marry a lazy man!

(Some irrelevant conversation)

RELATIONS BETWEEN TONKAWAS & KIOWA-APACHES

This old lady, Vera, (Cisco) she knows about Tonkawas. She lived over there. After her kids got full grown they moved back over here. I don't know what was her reason, but anyway they moved back over here, and ever since she's been here. But that other one--that other Apache lady--Alice Thaw--she was married. Her children, they were all raised over there. And she lived there till--she died over there.

(How old is Molly Cisco?)

Oh, I don't know. She's about between 75 and 80.

(Well, how did the Tonkawas and the Kiowa-Apaches ever get together?)

Well, I don't know just how they got together, but they used to come here. Some of the tribal leaders.

(You mean to this place?)

Yeah. The old man (Apache John)--they used to visit the old man. Back in horses and wagon days, they used to come on the trains, to Anadarko and they come to Apache. Course, at that time Molly and Alice Thaw--they were young girls, you know--married into the Tonkawas. There was just a few then. They come here to have peyote meetings. Apaches, Tonkawas,--they're together.

(Do you remember any of the names of the tribal leaders?)

No, I don't. Molly might.

(Do you remember their coming here?)

Well the story that they tell, you know--the one fellow that they talk about as---

(END OF TAPE)