

He found a earring, Indian-made earring. So he took this earring and he went around asking where this person was buried that used to own that place. Somebody told him where he was buried and he put the earring there and he wanted to find what was going to happen that same night. He stayed awake again until midnight and he never did hear anything. So he thought to himself, "Well, that must be what he comes around here to search for." Because he done took the earring back to his grave where he was buried. And nothing never did happen after that.

3. This is another old Indian ghost story. This happened way back in olden days along that time where they used to leave tipis up and they used to leave dead scouts in the tipis. They used to move on to another camp, a new camp, whenever they lost these Indian men. They were fighting fights at that time. Well, this Indian boy was well-known. A chief, a warrior, died. One day there was some more scouts scouting around happened to get dark around about that time. It got dark when they got to this place. It was a real old man in that tipi. Thought, we'll pay a visit, even though he's dead. We'll stop by. So they stopped at that tipi, it was at nighttime. And there was one boy in the bunch that was real tricky, he wanted to have fun with his other friends. He got away from this group of Indian warriors and he crawled in that tipi. He thought he'd tease these others. Make them believe that he came back alive. Well, these other warriors got their pipe out, peace pipe, put smoke in there and were holding that pipe towards the tipi. They talked to him in the Cheyenne language, "Our friend, pay a visit and give you a smoke at this time. Have pity on us. Don't bother us. Don't hunt us. We are your friends." He was talking like that. And this other guy that already crawled in there said, "How." He got these others scared and they kinda sat there a long time holding
