

(This morning I asked you a little about how the several wives of Jay's father got along. Would you like to tell about that?)

Well, this cousin of mine, Carrie, she asked her, she asked her, "Grandma, did you used to get jealous at them other women?" And she said, "No, we were all good-hearted, good natured, we didn't know what jealous was." See, they had their own tipi's. It wasn't tipi's like this...it was buffalo hide. "No," she said, "they didn't eat no canned stuff like white people bring." They didn't eat no stuff but game, you know, wild fruits, and they were all kind hearted.

(You said that Gilbert gave the horse you rode on. What relation to you is Gilbert?)

Well, his mother was a sister to my husband's foster mother. They adopted him. He's from Montana. They adopted him and he stayed a month, Gilbert and him. So Gilbert has no brothers and he picked him as a brother. So they are close to us that way. When I was in the laundry he stopped over here and I guess he told them about you girls and he was ready to come back.

TIPI FURNISHINGS:

(This morning we were talking about some of the furnishings in the tipi. Would you like to tell about that?)

Well, the men you know, they used to go out and hunt buffalo, and then they'd bring the hides home and then the woman, well, they'd stretch them out, and cut a little hole in the hide and stretch them out to dry and then when they, after they were dry they turned them over and scraped that fur off.

Off of those hides. Then they cut them up to make the tipi's, but
