

that somebody must have killed him or something like that. And finally he keep shooting four arrows. To come back to him. One evening he showed up coming down the road. His brothers was crying--thought he was dead. He told them what happened, everything from the beginning. That's why he followed the arrow, make sure that he got it back. Brought his brothers arrows back.

(And were they mad at him for using the arrows?)

No, they weren't mad at him, they were glad to have him back alive.

(Did he kill the white man too?)

He killed all of them. All of them. An old time story. My grandpa used to tell us. Happened a long long time ago. I guess a long time ago they used to could understand birds, buffaloes, and everything else, coyotes, wolves. They used to could understand each other you know, a long time ago. So that's how that boy came back. They all had the power in them days. They all say when it was good, everything was good that time. That's the way it happened. That's the end of the story.

STORY ABOUT WATER SNAKE

Well, let me tell you about another story. It's about a man and a woman and there was a girl. She was older than her little brother. There was two of them. There was a big camp there. This man used to dress up his wife. In those days I guess they used to dress them up, comb their hair, paint them up. She go down to a big pond, a swamp I guess. She used to go after water. And she used to tan hides down there. Every time she'd come back all her paint and everything would be just off. I guess all that time she was having an affair with a big old--some kind of a water mammal or something like that. It was a big water snake isn't it? (Mr. Hill said yeah.) So this man kinda
