

go for the wedding. Yeah that's the way they got married, you know and lived together.

IN-LAW AVOIDANCE:

Well back there they always put tipi up for them selves, the new married couple. And the boys, they're..well, their wives, mother or aunt, they're don't supposed to talk to them or you know, be close to them. Stay away from them and don't call their name. Yeah, and if this boy want to talk to his in-law well he could have his wife what he want to do and she go over there and tell them what he want done. Well, the same way with the girl, you know. She can't talk to her father-in-law, or his uncle, she can't talk to. She's got to stay away from them, don't look at each other. That's the way they do. But nowadays they don't care. Nowadays they..but me, you know, I m still kind of shy on that. My niece's husband, I don't like to be with him and talk to him..stay away from him but the younger generation today they don't care, they just stay together on and on together. And the people become all kinfolks, you know and each parent the boy's parent and the girl's parent, they all became kinfolks then. Yeah, that's the way..

CHILDBIRTH:

When this new married couple stayed together for so long, I say about five or six months, when this girl commenced to be pregnant, you know and on and on for a long time, you know and when she's going to have her first child, why she gets the old ladies. They're old ladies when they're experienced on you know, deliviering the babies. Well, they'd get two or three of them and keep them there and well this girl, she laid down and after the baby is born, well
