

buffalo, well he just load it on the extra horse what he took, he just load it on there and tie the legs together and hang it over the horse back and lead it home.

NAMING THE CHILD:

(Who named the child when it was born?)

Well, sometimes the parents both boys besides, sometimes the husband's or the wife's people, they can name them. They name them just the way they think is all right. Yeah, like some children's named by they way they're having wars, and somebody might do some honor you know something and they named them by that. And some named them by their old parents from way back yeah, they'd start all over again on that name. Of course everybody right now..we don't have the same name, like my married name, I go by it, but way back my name was Louise Saddleblanket, to begin with. All right, now I'm going by my married name. So that's the way it is, going back to the old days going by whatever they named them, they called them that name.

(Was there any special ceremony or any special thing they did when a child was named?)

Sometime. Sometime parents, you know, they kind of liked their child, loved their child. Well they can do that. But when they named it they do some kind of you know doings. Sometimes they put up feasts and the old man would be standing in front with this child and he said, "Name him." And we'd say "We name it, everybody in the crowd knows the child got this name." Yeah, that's the way they do, and another time they could name them was there might be some big dance going on somewhere you know they would get this man to bring him in
