

that and finally the little baby get all right and learn how to eat and that's the way they raised the children.

(What did the Apaches consider the ideal time between children?)

The girl, sometimes she don't want, you know, to sleep with men, but sometimes you know the men just have to sleep with a woman. And this girl, she'd keep on and keep on and finally she'd get in family again. Well, I don't know just in the different ways people are doing. Sometimes the girl would say, "Well, I'm going to have another child." That means they're already going to have another one. Yeah, that's the only way I know of. Of course they all got different ways and different actions and all like that, like some people, girls they don't have period for two or three months, you know, sometimes they come round again and sometimes on and on, sometimes it fooled them. They thought they was going to get their period again, and here they go, the first thing they know they're in a family way. Yeah, they say they ought to wait for about two years, but way back they tell they don't believe in having a child every two years, or any on there like that. Yeah, way back there they just wait and wait, til the baby's about five years old, and they still nurse them too. Great big child like my grandson, Junior, see he's gonna be five. In old time he'd be nursing yet. Yeah, in the old time that's what they do way back. But now they just go two years, and now they got their. and sometimes they just have children one after the other. But way back they don't like it, it make them mad to have children right along close together. So the time the children would be big, well
