

want to let our children go across there for? They're my grandchildren and I want to take them back home." And he said, "No, they're following their mommy and daddy and I seen them went by." And she said, "Well, let me cross then, I got to get them." And he said, "All right. look in my head first and find some bugs. Be sure there's four bugs." And she pulled one out and busted it. "What does it taste like?" "Oh, it tastes like dog puke." And he got another one. "What does it taste like?" "Oh, it tastes like cow," uh, you know namure. It tastes like that." Another..third one. All them nasty things she mentioned. He said, "All right, come on. Cross." So he put his leg across for her and she walked and just about the time she got in the middle of the water that's flowing, he said, "Oh, I got a cramp in my leg, you know," and he pulled his leg back and the old lady fell in the water. Fell in the water and she float and she drowned. She never did get these children. And these children kept doing and going and finally they find a place where their parents people camped. And they stopped over there and they find some scraps of meat, you know and they pound it with rock and they begin eating. And all right, they stayed there for a long time. And finally he said, "I'm going to go way up there and lay down on the hill like for four days and for four nights. You stay here, don't you go nowhere." Says the sister, "All right." And this boy was, oh, pretty good-sized boy then. They stayed there a long time. So this boy went up there and he stayed there four nights and four days, and never drink or never eat. Finally something blessed him. I don't no, some kind of spirit blessed him. That he's kind of a medicine man. And he said, "All right." And the man managed this boy to go out and hunt buffalo and make hides, and they made it into tipi where they stayed and they stayed there all the time and they got plenty of meat to eat. And finally he said, "All right, it's kind of scarce to buffalo and deer, and now
