

(not clear).

(How old was his little brother?)

He was twelve years old when he died. He had cancer on the glands. At that time they didn't know what cancer was. But Bert Geikomah knew that's what that was.

(What did your husband wear when you got married?)

No, he didn't have to dress up. His family take a lot of blankets over there. Move around. You go in that tipi and it's cold and they put that bottom for you. And he was the one that got all the blankets. She give them to us.

(So you don't get to keep them?)

I don't get to keep them. But my mother-in-law gave me lot of blankets, a lot of shawls, lot of material and--

(Are there presents given to the bride when you get married?)

Well, from my--from her folks, not on his side, but my side--

(His folks?)

They give, my relations.

(Did they have special presents for them, or like material and stuff?)

Shawls and material, groceries, I don't know how many blankets there were. Quite a few of them.

(question not clear)

Yes, my folks. They had their own tipi, it was bout, I'd say about four horses give away at my wedding, on my relatives' side. Four horses. And some of them, you know, they just tell if they want a horse, they say I want that horse, and they got that much money and they kind of trade around.
