

(Is he the one that gave you all those books to study, to read?)

No, Dr. Hart.

LATER YEARS TOOK NURSE'S AID TRAINING - INCIDENTS

(How far did you get with your nurse's aid training?)

Oh, I went about three months. See, we go to school half a day and we work half a day. And I was promoted to high school in some subjects. We got our own subjects, you know, what we wanted, four or five subjects, whatever we thought we could carry during the school year. I took nurse training and library and English and geography. That's my little granddaughter, she wanted to drink coal oil. I gave her Pet milk, can, I just give her whole cream, poured in a glass and just gave it to her.

(Without anything, water or anything?)

Without any water.

(Did she drink it all?)

Yeah, she drank it all. And when they got her to the hospital, that doctor (not clear).

(Oh, she drank it but didn't it taste awful to her? That coal oil?)

Oh sure. But she was little, she didn't realize what was going on. Her father got it out there, he was using some coal oil, you know, he had some little potted meat cans, poured some of it in there and left, oh, about that much in there. My husband and my boy, my oldest boy and my son-in-law, they rushed her to Clinton Indian Hospital. Drove his car over there and got there in forty-five minutes.

(Oh, my God!)

Said he didn't care if the highway patrol stopped him or not, but they wanted
