

using all the different herbs the Indian used today? Just like I been telling you, the white man is out for things to gain for himself.

CHILDREN'S STORIES

(Do you want to tell stories now?)

This is one handed down from generation to generation. I don't know how true it is, but there is a white man, there always is a white man in them stories. At this certain time this white man went down the river. He see one party, and this party what it was was a bird. He'd take his eyes out and through them up in a tree, and he'd say a certain word and then them eyes would be in that bird's head. And that white man just watched him. So he came to his senses and said, "I wish I had his power to do them things." He walks up to them and prays to that bird and says, "Five me that power so I can do them things." "What things?" "Take my eyeballs out and through them on a tree and say that magic word and popp them back." "Well, alright, I'm going to give you just once. See that tree, that limb up there?" "Yes." "Well you try that." Well, he done that, put those eyes up there and say that magic word and them eyes popped back in his sockets. "Now I got it, that's mine. I'm going go out and graft that, make profit for myself. And that bird said, "There's one thing I don't want you to do. Don't over do it. I'm just going to give you four chances. If you do it more then four times, well then you are goin be sorry." So he went down there, he was proud he could do them things, he pulled his eyes out of the sockets and through them up in a tree, say the magic word and they'd popped back in. "Boy, I've got it down pat." Done it again, that's twice. Went