

know, they give out you know and their horses died, and they were on foot when they came to this mountain. Their two little boys was with them. They was real small when they left and they were pretty good size, and he would take those boys and they would go out hunting for deer, and they killed deers they killed deers and pack it to the house and their mother would dry it just like I was cutting that meat. She would get a lot of it deer after deer, and they finally had a lot of dry meat for the winter. And so she pack all this and that woman she tanned the hide and she made little buckskin suits for them little boys and she made a dress for herself and boots for her husband and they all made clothese out of this, this buckskin. She didn't tan those boots, she just turned them outside and put the fur inside so it could keep their feet warm. Made them boots out of it. made them little jackets out of it and with the sleeves and they wear it all through that winter and their daddy and them would go out and chase deers and they said them boys got so they could just run like deers. And they could catch these little bitty deers, and they took them you know to the place where they living and their mother would when they would kill a deer would cut strings out of it strings out of it, and you know, those old people could make good long ropes out of those deers. And she made ropes for them and they always just roped these deers and they brought them up there to the house and keep them tied up and after a while, just think now, in them days you know people would never think that they could tame them deers, but they did. They tamed those deers and they got so they could ride these deers, and just go any place with them. They got so tame, you know. Those boys tamed them and their daddy got one and they all tamed and their mother got one and they all had places
