

to go, and hunt and they had to ride these deers, just like...you know they sure get tame when you catch them small and that's what they done and they had those deers to ride around when they go after deer for their meat, you know, or they would chase buffalo on it and their dad would kill a buffalo with bows and arrows. Their daddy made little bitty bows and arrows for them so they'd know how to handle them arrows, bows and arrows. And it's really nice. They lived there for many years, and finally their dad said, "Well, it's spring time now and we get out of here and we're going to go as far as we can. In fact, we're going up that way west. We're going to go up in another place and live maybe where we could get something to eat." And so they went, and they went so far, and it was warm it got warm you know, and these deer, they had for horses deer, you know, deer instead of horses and them little deers really go fast when they ride them you know and their mother had one they were riding and their dad and these two boys. They took off, and they came to a place in the night time where they had a fire place and they went over there and this man said, "I believe I go first, and you all stay here. I go up there and sneak up to that place where it's got lighting and see who's over there." And he walked over there and they waited for him way down...you know, they were hiding for him, some place, he walked up there and finally he come to a place and there was a place there it had a home you know, and they built it like what they had you know out of trees and it was fixed real nice. There was a woman and a man and a little boy there was three of them and this woman said, well, this man was singing you know and he came close to the place there to their home and he listened and this man was singing. And he heard him singing and this woman said, "Well,
