

I don't know where they went to til those boys were grown and grown young boys again. And they went one of those two, see those two womans one of those little boy's mother she died and those two little boys were left alone with this other woman. And so after a while they said, "Let's go to..." and they got rid of their deers, and I guess they died or something and he said, "Let's walk. Let's walk some place where we could find horses, just as far as we could go." And they went and kept a going, and this old lady she was with them and way up in age you know she followed them around everywhere they would go. She goes with them and they would walk so far and then wait for her when she gets tired. When she get over there she stop walking and would get to rest up. So she just followed them everywhere they would go and finally they come to a place where they have lights, and these three boys said, "That's a Mexican home. It's a Mexican that live there. We're going to walk up there and if they've got any horses in the corral tied up we're going to cut the ropes off and we're going to steal those horses." And they crawl up there they walk closer to the houses and they seen the corral and they went over there and they went inside it and their dog started barking at them. And one said, "When that dog runs this way, you know, you must kill it." And they had bows and arrows. Well, that dog chased them and it was a great big dog he chased them and one of those boys had a great big long pole you know a green pole and it was heavy and he swing it like that and kill that dog and knock it down. So these horses commenced to run when they come into that corral. Well, they grabbed these horses they grabbed these horses and they got four horses. They got four horses out for themselves, and they
