

(Well, if someone asked your father to come and doctor them, would that person also ask Ténéhadl or would your father go and get him?)
 No, they call my father to go and my father ask him. And then if Ténéhadl, if they call him, well, then he calls my daddy.

(Well, then would your dad give anything to his friend or something for payment?)

Well, if he calls him to help him, whatever they give him, suppose they butcher a beef for him, well, he give him half. They would help just like doctors when they go through operation.

(Would they doctor all day and all night?)

No, they doctor in the morning, I guess. They doctor in the morning and maybe in the evening--two times. They'll doctor early in the morning and then in the evening. If a person is real sick, maybe they doctor during the night.

(Well, do they just sing those medicine songs, or do they ever use any other songs?)

No, just the medicine songs. No dance song, no powwow, no peyote songs--nothing. Just their own songs they sing. And just them sing, nobody else. Just the man that doctors. When my father doctors, he ask my brother to where he doctors. He wants him to pick up what he done because when he passed away, he's the one going to carry the medicine. And he takes him in when he was about twelve years old. And he goes in there with Dad. And when he sings, well he give that other medicine--he got two buffalo tails. He give the other one to my brother. And then he just follow his dad what he's doing. And then he knows the songs. He help him sing them, but he's got a right because that's my fathers.
