

Yeah, they have a tent for them away from the house so nobody won't bother her. Maybe there be a couple womans in there with her. Helping her, because sometimes when you young you can't lay still, you can't just lay there and have your baby. They don't give you shots or nothing, you just got to suffer. Then it comes out, that's all, you don't suffer no more.

(What did they do in case of a miscarriage?)

They just let it come out. In that miscarriage they press your stomach right here. They hold you like and make you sit on your knees. You be kneeling down like this and the woman be setting behind you kneeling down just like you and she hold you tight like that and ever time you strain she push and keep pressing down and after awhile it come out.

(Would the woman be sitting down?)

Yea, she be sitting down on her knees. Bent down so she could bear down when it start paining. When she strains, this woman just help her. Because if its dead in the stomach it won't even move...just lay there. But you be having all those pains. When you have all those pains they got to press it out and get it out. Sometimes when the head just barely come out and they know its dead, they just hold the head and drag it out.

~~(They just bury it~~ What do they do with it?)

They just bury it. Bury it somewhere.

(Do they do the same thing with the after birth?)

Yes. They have to let them kneel down like this, kind of spread your legs out like that and then they press your stomach and then all at
