

We just stay with him. We just couldn't come home because when we get up there he's just so glad, he just tickled to death. Right up to today he don't like them. He has to go up there to school but he just says, "I just hate those folks. I don't like to stay." He calls them folks. He don't even call them mama and daddy. He calls his grandma mama and his grandpa daddy. He's not no kin to us. Joey is not even his grandfather. (The He above refers to Joey Nieto) No kin to him, but he helped me raise him. He sure was nice to him. He makes him mind us. Sometimes he get crazy and wouldn't mind us but he knows we do anything for him now. When he start walking, When he start nursing his bottle... he had little panties you know. He would grab them and hold them and we have to take those little panties everywhere we go. When he start drinking his bottle...he would always grab them. I still got them here somewhere and his little baby boots. He goes to school up there. They live in a colored town. He goes, but there still white peoples over there. He got lot of boy friends up there. He plays with colored kids. But they really nice people. Lot of them people are pretty well off. They sure nice people.

INCOMPLETE STORY OF ALONE IN THE WILDERNESS:

Well, they took off. These two womans and three mens. This one man didn't have no wife, but these two were the wives of there two and on the way, they were going to Mexico. On the way two of them died and she was left alone with these three men. And when they were all living together, this one of these men...well, they had trouble with this Mexicand or Navajos and you know they killed two of these mens and one of them was her husband. So she was alone with this man, and
