

they travel around, travel around and finally they come to a place where they were unknown and they had to make a house out of cedar trees like the way them other peoples did, and they live there for a long time, two or three years they live in that house, and they would go out and kill deer and she would cook and they were living there together and finally this man he died and she was left alone. And then it come spring time and she said, "I'm here alone now and I don't know what I'm going to do. I believe I'll just start walking. I'll make me some boots out of raw hide and then I'll make some extra ones and then I'll just start off walking. When I see the sun come out, that's the way I want to walk." She just turn around. She don't know which way the sun go down and which way it comes up. So when the sun was coming out, she start walking this way. The sun went this way and went down and still she was walking, walking walking. And when it got dark, she stopped. And it was getting colder, it wasn't hot...getting cold. She start walking, walking and she wear her other boots out. So she took her others and she start walking, walking, finally it got cold. She start climb a hill you know and then she went over the hill and she came to another hill and it had big rocks. She said, "I believe I just rest" here and she climbed the mountain and she come to big cave and she crawled in there and it was a cave. When she grawled in there she saw something laying there. All at once it growled at her and it was a bear...two if them in there. This one growled at her and the other one just lay there and looked at her and then she layed down and this bear come towards her and smell her around. Push her over with his arm and then roll her this way and that way and then
