

They'll either give them horse to sell and get the money and put in their treasury. Or maybe they'll give them a beef so their next meeting they can butcher this beef and eat it there.

(How do they go about these things anyway? Do they announce it aloud?)

Yeah, they announce it. They announce maybe their little new born babyo--someone that they love--they said, "You have to come to serenade them. And through him you are given that--" They'll name it, or either a gun, or something.

(If they were giving something like a beef, would they bring it out at that time or what?)

They appoint certain ones. They say, "This beef has been put in your charge. So this one be listening. "Wherever we put our next meeting," he said, "You can butcher that beef and you can bring it and we can eat it together." That's the way they use this beef. And the money that's given to them, they'll buy the rest of the trimmings for that beef. Maybe bread, or maybe just coffee, sugar, whatever goes with the dinner. That's the way they do. And then they'll go on. They do that all the way around. Just certain ones that want the man to come out with his pipe and fill it up and do the same thing again. Maybe next time they'll look for another soldier that's been to Germany--first World War. Well they--he'll be given that pipe and he'll tell his story.

(brief interruption)

ENCOURAGING WARRIORS TO BE BRAVE:

And let me finish telling this dance and then we can tell about what they do when they eat. And then they'll go to the last camp. It's morning by then. Beginning to turn grey at out east where they'll be preparing for another one--differeint kind of a dance that they do at the end. Then they bunch up over there. They going to maybe appoint this--maybe there's too many old men there that can't run anymore. Or even if it's old man, if he's able to run, well he's going to be fixing themselves where nothing won't fall while they run. They going to race. Then they sing--they kind of dance back to the center, maybe, where they started out from. Then after so far, why they going to stop there. Then by the time it's started different people are beginning to come out from their
