toward the east said he could see the sun coming up. Then about the time the sun come up, it just lightening, thundering and just poured rain. Just soaked him wet. He got wet and he opened his eyes and he said he could see that sun coming up. And he said it just naturally come back to me." He said, "I didn't put nothing on. It just come to me. My eyes open, I could see there. Just soaking wet and it had hailed on me, too--heavy hail on me. And after I got hailed, it sunshined and cleared off. It got warm and I just walked down the mountain. Walked home" he said. And never did get blind anymore.

(Oh, that's wonderful.)

Didn't see anybody he said. Just come.

(You know, I was just wondering if people would get these gifts if they were really going out looking for one or if it ever just came to them?)

Well, they really go out looking for gifts. But sometimes they get it, and sometimes they don't. One Indian said he laying down there and where--it was a test. What we would say a test to see whether it was real or not. Lots of people said this gift come in imaginations. You could see it coming and if you want to accept them, and don't get scared and run off, you get those gifts. But if you get scared and run off, you don't get them. So this Indian was laying down, he said he imagine a big prairie fire coming. He said that's just something to scare me up. I'll not move, but he said he looked at it and looked at it and it's awful. Just blazing and coming to him. And he said, "Just imagination." He said, "I'm just going to hold my ground." Said it got pretty close, got pretty hot and it was real. Wasn't no imagination. It was a real prairie
