

So he danced. They told him, "All right, dance." So he danced. While he was dancing he was looking around. He was looking for a hole to jump into. So he finally seen that hole. He jumped in and that's how he got away from his enemies. That's all.

STORY OF TWIN BOY GROWING FROM AFTERBIRTH THROWN IN RIVER

Laura Big Horse: I'm going to tell about a boy. I guess his folks were off camping to themselves. He was born to these two--couple. And I guess this woman, she told her husband to take the after-birth and hang it on a tree. But instead of hanging it on a tree, he went and threw it in a creek or river. And anyway, this after-birth, it growed in the water. It grow (into) a little boy. So this boy, he grew up and he grew up to be about eleven or twelve years old. I guess his mother and his father used to go hunting deer, you know, or game or whatever they could find. And then his mother would go out and the woman, she used to do the hardest work. Have to hunt for water and get wood. She'd bring in the wood and bring it on her back. It would take her about all day to do that. So while they were gone, his mother would cook a meal for him. Enough for dinner and supper. And she'd tell her son, "You eat this while we're gone, and when we come back, we'll eat again." So he'd eat. And I guess his father made a bow and arrow. And I guess he'd shoot this bow and arrow. He marked off a place. It's kind of like a , I guess, along the creek. He'd go over there and then he'd shoot. See how far he could shoot his bow. The little boy would shoot his bow and arrow, and then he'd go back this other way, just back forth. And one time while he was playing, he seen somebody peeking at him over that kind of timber or woods or ground. It was a boy just like him. He looked at him. He went toward him. This other little boy, he jumped back in the water. Finally--oh, that went on for quite a while. Finally
