While he was dancing he was ldoking around. He was looking for While he was dancing he was looking around. He was looking for a hole th jump into. So he finally seen that hole. He jumped in and that's how he got away from his enemies:' That's all. STORY OF TWIN BOY GROWING FROM AFTERBIRTH THROWN IN RIVER

Laura Big Horse:' I'm going to tell about a boy. I guess his folks were off camping to themselves. He was born to these two--couple. And I guess this woman, she told her husband tô take the afterbirth, and hang it on a tree. But fnstead of hanging it on a tree, he went and threw it in a creek or river. And anyway, this afterbirth, it growed in the water. It grow (into) a little boy. So this boy, he grew up and he grew up to be about eleven or twelve years old. I guess his mother and his father used to go hunting deer, you know, or game or whatever they could find. And then his mother would go out and the woman, she used to do the hardest work. Have to hunt for water and get wood. She'd bring in the wood and bring it on her back. It would take her about all day to. do that. So while they were gone, his mother would cook' a meal 'for him. Enough for dinner and supper. "And she'd tell her son, "You eat this while were gone, and when we come back, we'll eat again." So he'd eat. 'And I guess his father made' a bow and arrow. And I guess he'd shoot this bow and arrow. He marked off a place. It's kind of like a . I guess, along the creek. He'd go over there and then he'd shoot. See how far he could shoot his bow. The little boy would shoot his bow and arrow, and then he'd go back this other way, just back forth. And one time while he was playing, he seen somebody peeking at him over that kind of timber or woods or ground. It was a boy just like him. He looked at him. He went toward him. This other little boy, he jumped back in the water. Finally--oh, that went on for quite a while, Finally
