

the groom rather - ah - the relatives over there - in the meantime were assigned - ah - a bridesmaid. And they gathered their relatives together too, and they assign them with a bridesmaid - and maybe there was some - maybe - that didn't get a bridesmaid. But just whatever number of bridesmaids there was, that's how many relatives were assigned. And so - ah - the wedding procession started, the bride takes the lead and then bridesmaid - they're numbered - there's maybe one that's suppose to be second and third and so forth. Well they fall in line and then - on the other - on the groom's side, well - they're - people - that are assigned a bridesmaid, are standing out there^{ready} to run a race to get their brides - ah - to get their bridesmaid. And of course the family gets the bride. And ah - they the bridesmaids' people - my - which was my people - they put up a prize for the one that won the race and I don't know what the prize was. I probably knew then - but I forgotten. It might have been a horse, or it might have been a beef, or blanket, or something. But anyhow the race started when the gun went off. They shot a gun and the race started. And ah - I remember ah - the groom's people came and there was two or three of them - and they spread down a blanket, and they put my sister in this blanket. They sit her down, and they carried her to the - to the - Oh I guess you could call it an arbor, it was a long shed they had built. They were just camping you know. They were just living in tents, and they built this place it was kinda of a long place, and they had places there for each of the bridesmaids and place for the bride. They carried the bride - so they carried my sister and the rest of us walked. Our - the one that we were assigned to - would come and get us, and they hold our arm and they lead us in. Then when we get in there - well - they have clothes
