

Mrs.: And you know we've gotta ah. He's dead though now. I'd see an Indian here and I couldn't... It was somethin' wrong with 'em but I couldn't place what it was. And he had long braids. And one day, I met him right face to face. And he had the keenest blue eyes you've ever seen. And I said to a cousin of mine that lived here a long time. I said, old Jack Bonney's the first uh blue-eyed Indian I ever seen in my life. And he laughed and said he's not got a drop of Indian blood bout him. He's Irish. And he'd been captured when a baby. Of course, raised with the Indians and course took up the Indian habits and everthing but I knew there was somethin' about him. That uh, course I didn't jest eye him all over but then I jest met him comin' up the street one day.

Mr.: Was either his girl or his sister, one married a Quetone.

Mrs.: And I jest called him...

Mr.: She's a white woman and they lived right across over here.

Mrs.: He was...he didn't have any Indian about him at all. We've got several Indians that I've had around here that was captured by the Indians in the early days. We had one ole lady that was captured. Now, I forget what her name was, now. But then her son-in-law was George Hunt. But cha know they don't wanta go back and live. He'd taken her back after he found out where she belonged and everthing. He hunted up her folks, her white folks, in Texas, and he'd taken her to see them. But then see it was jest all blank to her because see she was jest a baby. And she'd married a Indian and her children were Indian. And she didn't care to go back and live as a white person. Her husband, he was an Indian and awful well educated. Him and his wife both.

Mr.: Was ole Jack Bonney's mother?

Mrs.: Yeah.

Mr.: And 'him' and his sister...his sister or his girl...one married Johnny Quetone. She's a white woman.

Mrs.: Yeah, no, she's Mexican, Hy. No, Johnny Quetone is Mexican and his wife is Indian. She...she wouldn't come to that banquet they had fer 'em...because...

Mr.: She's white. She's ole Jack Bonney's girl. Or sister one.

Mrs.: But she behaved Indian because she married.
