

and also makes a good pie. And we use d to make what we call "sodie pop" out of it. And my grandmother used to make wine out of sheep shower. Sandy, do you know where any sheep shower is? Get us some. I think most of it, what's left around here, is that little bitty, - - and this isn't as good as the - - oh, she moved the tents, and she can't find it. We might find some, - - but as - the big kind - - it looked kinda like, you know what a four leafed clover looks like? Well, this looks similar to the four leafed clover, only it has three leaves. Now the big kinds what you want to get. And it had a leaf as big as your thumb. And it's real good. You wash it, and just eat it. You make salad or anything. Now this is the small kind. See? That isn't so good. But when you get the great big kind, you usually find it when it's damp. And the leaves, each leaf there, be big as your thumb. See? And the stems will be red. And I mean it's real good. It makes a very delicious wine. Oh, there's another, - - in the spring time, the little thing that grows up around the stem, that, they call "Mouse's ear". Now what the botany name of that, now I don't know. And anyway, those were greens we used to eat. Now that's what they left for the Indian people to eat. These things right here. That's what they had left when the whites got through with them. That's why they ate like they did. You know when they was - - they were drove to - - the whites, they talk about the Indians start the fight. The Indians di n't start the fight. You go back through history and the Indians met the boats when they came. And they offered them gifts. And started the fight? It was started 'cause the ignorant people was scared of 'em. Well, they didn't know 'em. And yeah, that's the cactus apple there. There's not any around here. There some back down on the place. And there's - - I don't know if there's any buffalo beans around here. I don't see 'em. Little around Drumright. There's much more rainfall over there, and these things stay longer over there, than they do here. See. Oh, if you could read this writing. Well I'D - - Oh, I was
