

that's every Friday night over there at Yellow Mission. We had them games. And we had a preacher, his name was Mr. Reed. The first preacher was named Mr. Harper. You know that, south of Apache, that reform church, they got their recreation hall in there and Harper's Hall it says. That's Mr. Harper. He was the first preacher. And the next one was Mr. Reed. He had a lot of children. He had Lila, Kathryn, Tiny, Jackie, oh, he had about four or five children I guess. And they were raised with us. Every summer we had to go to Bible School. One month. Not just a day. One month we had to go to Bible school. And when we make good grades we'd have a picnic at the end of the month. We'd go to Medicine Bluff or somewhere and have a picnic. And in this month you had to learn catechism, you have to learn parts of the Bible, you have to name the books of the Bible and just all that, you know.

CHURCH:

(What church was this?)

Dutch Reform, and one time this preacher's daughter, her name was Lila she said, "you can't rope me." She started running and this one boy just swung the rope right above his head like that and he threw it and he roped her just right. He roped her leg and she fell on her face and she told the preacher he roped her and he was going to punish him but we told him she was the cause of it because she wanted them to rope her so he didn't punish him. His name was James--one of these separation company now.

(The what?)

--separation. Them's that against the Comanche. You know, they want to separate. He's one of them. He's a half breed.

(When did all that stuff start about the separation?)

I don't know.. Here about four or five years ago, I guess. And I tell you we have a lot of--we had all kinds of games Friday nights and let's see--
