

(Did you ever eat that green?)

Oh, yeah...green, they can dry it too. Make sweet corn out of it.

(Well, what do you mean by making sweet corn out of it?)

It's just like you cook it in bucket and then they get it out of the cob.

And that corn, you dry that, and that's what we call sweet corn. That's what we call sweet corn.

(You cook it while it's still green...just boil it?)

Yeah. We pick it. We go out and pick it. And then we cook it--not too long. Just when we think it's about just right. Then we take it out.

When it's cook, we take the corn off the cob. And then we dry it and make sweet corn out of it.

(Oh, then how do you eat that?)

You just cook it in a soup. Soup--just like the rest of the corn.

(You know, I haven't eaten to many of these different kinds of corn so I just don't understand, you know, about how they fix it. But how does this corn, that sweet corn, when its dry and then you cook it with water and soforth, well, how does it taste different from the corn that you dry the cob? And then you cook it.)

You mean dried corn like that?

(Umhummm.)

It taste different and that dried sweet corn, it's good. And this here tastes different. They don't taste alike. Well, I couldn't tell you how it taste.

(Yeah, well, which do you like best?)

I like all of it. But, I'll show you. Wait I go get it.*
