

(You mean the meaning of the name?)

The meaning of the name. They found out later that that name was a big name out of Washington. So, they want to get the true history of my father's life, and what that name represents. So, the older people told me, that are living today, pretty well agreed people, they told me that name is pretty big. That's the meaning of big name. So, that's why I say that ancestors of way back these: those people that went in the water with the teepee and all; well, they originate from there to here. So, that's the big meaning of my father. See, he has a big name. His great grandfather has a big name. He was a big Kiowa-Apache chief among the whole tribe. And they had very few big chiefs like Big Bow, and these other big Chiefs-like that they mentioned at Ft. Sill. All of them names been mentioned. My great great great grandfather was a big chief among the Kiowa-Apaches, way back there. He was a big chief among them. He was pretty wise and pretty smart. So, therefore, we have outstanding educated Kiowa-Apaches living today. Young generation, they living today. They have degree in school, in colleges, Kiowa-Apaches, of course, they have, they were the first one to accept the school system. They wanted it. They wanted to learn so that they can show other people the education they have. So they pretty well educated - pretty well up to date, Kiowa-Apache educated people.

(Who do you think are the least educated tribe in Oklahoma?)

Well, I tell you - according to my learning and my thinking, I think that the, of course now you take the Eastern Five Civilized tribes, I guess they about the educated Indians in the world. Because they were way back there - - they got contact with the whites and they obeyed the white law and rules, so they got the first education, they got degrees. We got some in Washington in the Indian Commission. We got some here at the Indian area office as area director for the Indians, full blooded Indians.

(But of the Cheyenne, Arapaho, Kiowa, Comanche and Apache, who do you think are the least educated?)
