

Well, I think that the, as far as I know, think that we just about equal. About equal all those tribes. But like I say, the Kiowa-Apache tribe, they have more education and more degree of college than the other tribes, according to my belief. I seen it. I studied it over among those educated young mens. But we have some Kiowa educated today living right now. We got some good ones too. Pretty smart. Our general superintendent up here, lives up here on the hill. He's a superintendent of the Indian Methodist Nations. He has a degree, a high degree. (What is his name?)

His name is Bob (?) He's pretty well educated. Got degree. And we have severl more of those Kiowas that has degree in college. Different degrees. Some of them doctors degree. "ave some of them. Then the Comanches have some in their tribe. Also, in the Cheyenne and Arapaho, they have them. The Caddos, Wichitas and Delewares, they have them. So, I say mostly all the tribes in Oklahõma has degree of some kind. Doctors degree - -

(Could you tell me where the Delaware Indians came from?)

They came from way back around - - they claim that they come from Georgia down in there in them swamp lands, way back there. The Caddos and the Wichitas and the Delawares - - you see, way back there they originate with the Creek Indians. They were kind of alike.

(Did they all live in the same place?)

Same part of the country, but they live a far distance from one another. So there's a lot of those Caddos that is originate from there. There's a lot of them up there today; somewhere over there around Georgia or somewhere in Louisiana or somewhere over in there.

(Where do the Delaware Indians in Oklahoma live?)

They scattered now, north of the Washita River, north. All back as far as they can go, clear to Arapaho and Cheyenne country. The line comes right on in there.
