

(Do you remember what that judge's name was?)

Yeah, I know it you bet I don't remember that sheriffs name, I know one of the deputy's name, but he didn't have nothing to do with it. He's one of the Hildebrands.

(But you're not going to tell me who that judge was?)

Oh, gosh I couldn't I might go to jail. There's somethings my grandma you know, I knew to much about see, and they don't outlaw somethings. and ah so anyway well another time well in court--one time I was in the court and how come I was to get in court, was you know, I told you she made this wine, well she had some wine some real good wine and she didn't make slpp like you know, but my half uncle he was you know, he just put anything in it. Well, grandma wouldn't let him fool with the wine at all. But one time she came down to Texas and went to Texas and spent a year down there with my sister. And so anyway well she was gone Claud well he went down for a little while, but he come back. So, Claude he just got to bootleggin' he was to laxy to work you know.

(What was his--)

my half uncle.

(Claud what?)

Huffman. And he kinda like an old man, you know. And he was to laxy to work and he got to bootleggin' and these guys that come up over there, well they I don't suppose they even knew that Claud was there see, time the time these men came up there, when I was there, well Claud had already married and left. You know and lived someplace else. And anyway ahese guys came up to the kitchen and grandma had one of these box-houses, you know, there was four rooms cut off like this, you know. But she had a big porch across the south and the west and it made the house look pretty, you know, these bit columns and anyway they came up to the kitchen door--they knew where to come to see and they came up to the back door and of course they was whooping and hollering and it was after dark and according to granny anybody didn't have any business being out after dark, see. They come up and granny always kept an old iron tea kettle settin' on the stove, full of water heatin' up. And we finished supper and done the dishes and course she still had that thing on the stove full of hot water and she tried to
