

er than anything I ever pulled out of a washing machine.

(When did you do this?)

Oh, I did it up until I guess about 7 years ago was the last time I ever--course then when you live around a construction operation, you know, and then in the Army I couldn't do it, I'd wash in these cheapy laundramats, you know. Clothes looked like mud. Right now I've got whiter sheets and things and that's--you know what kind of water I wash in==I ain't got no hot water tak. I wash in cold water. And I don't use that cold-water All eighter. That's a malarkey, I tried that and it and my clothes, I was shamed of 'em. I was shamed to hang 'em out. They didn't get the smell out of them or anythin'. They get I got a wahsin' in there right now, that I just got through takin' off the line, but I washed it in cold water--when we went down to the lake you know, well we's there somebody came in and turned the electricity on to the hot water tank, we had a 40 gallon one in there and no water in it. So you see we runned it. So, come back and I washed all last winter outside without any hot water.
