

points all night and the next day too. By evening the boy had won everything the men had. Again the old man Red Hat said, "I have one more bet to make. I have three daughters. One of them is married and two of them are not married. I am betting the second to the oldest." Embarrassingly, he agreed to play for the daughter. The other men encouraged both of the players. They played on and towards morning the boy won the bet. Red Hat said, "You won me clean, You win my daughter. You can come early in the morning to collect your winnings." He described the house to the boy. The boy went to the house that was on the hill. He arrived before noon. Red Hat said, "I have a few little chores for you to do. When you finish you can go." The boy worked until evening and when he finished it was late. Red Hat said, "It's late. You better sleep here so you can make an early start in the morning." But that night the old mother-in-law killed the boy and kept all his belongings. No one ever heard of him again.

The next year the third boy came of age and wanted to go out for himself. The father said the same things to his third son. "Your brothers went before you and never came back. You be careful and think about it. The boy protested that he was old enough to take care of himself. Taking his belongings he traveled to different places and again, he met the gamblers. One of the men said to the, "You can sit in and make a foursome." So the boy sat in and gambled with the men. He played until he won everything the man had. Old Man Red Hat said, "I have one more thing to bet. I have three daughters. Two of them are married and the smallest one isn't married. I'll bet her." They played again until early in the morning the old man went broke and said, "You have won me clean. Now you come and collect sometime today." As the old man was leaving he told the boy, "I live upon the hill in a two story house. You come there." When the boy came to this place he noticed that the old man had a big farm. He saw three girls as the old man said, Red Hat said, "This is your girl, but before you take her I want you to do a little favor for me. I have a big barn to clean and you can clean it for me before you go." The boy started to
