

You could eat this, just chew it and--

(Now that's the baykwee not sue.)

Yes. But that--it's all right but it's hard to chew. But you got to pound it or just scrap it, and mix it with this and makes it better you know. Makes it stronger. Oh, this is the--oh, that's the same thing.

(Is that bay keww not sue?)

Yes. This is when I run out of it, I just had that much left. This is what you call--when a little bab's sick, you cut piece of this about that big, ($\frac{1}{4}$ inch square) and put it on the fire and let the baby inhale this and it goes in all the head and make the--make them well.

(What kind of fur is that?)

It's just a little--well it come from the water, you know in Montana, I mean Wyoming. One woman gave me this. That's how they use it. Cause right here, we don't know nothing about it. That's what she said.

(Looks like a little white otter or something like that.)

Something. She said that's what they use up there. When the little baby's sick, they just cut little piece of it off and let them inhale it. Oh, this is the charcoal. When there's a swelling place like on your feet, you just get this and mark it around like that and when ~~this~~ is--well, it won't go up.

(Oh, when you mark it with this charcoal?)

Yeah, mark it with this charcoal.

(Is that special?)

Oh, it just come from the peyote drum, you know. It's been blessed and went through the meeting, and after they get through, they give it to me. I have to keep it, you know. And when anybody get hurt,
