

So they throwed that wheel down again and it fell down in there same way, fell down in there and it fell into it. Inside. Oh yeah, it went and caught on that tipi pole. And so these boys they stood up there and they hollered, "Whoever you are, our wheel stop up there and I want you to get it down for us and give it to us, we want it, so this man told them to come in, didn't he? (questions his wife) Yeah, he said "You come in here first and when I tell you to do this and do that, if you pass all of the test in there, then I go up there and I get it down for you." So these two boys, they went in there and they were something tied on these tipi poles in there, tied in a bag. And this man told them, "Come on sit down over here." So they sat down over there and they watch him so pretty soon this old man got up and the first one he untied it. Yeah he told his wife, "Go over there and untie that first one. Drop it down on the ground inside the tipi." So once she untie it and drop it down that smoke began to come out. Smoke you know. So the old man he looked over and "Say, are the two boys still sitting right." She said, "They ain't nothing wrong with them, they still sitting there." He said, "Go over there and turn that over one." So he kept putting them down and kept asking her if they still sitting there. But the third or the fourth bag he drop he couldn't even stand it himself, neither could the old lady. That smoke was so bad it just smother them, you know, and choking them. And the boys was jus still sitting there, them two boys, everytime they had smoke get around, they'd say in the Kiowa language, Tahn ma tahn ma tahn ma. It means for that smoke to stand up above their heads. That smoke won't go down farther then where they at. It'll stay above their heads so that won't smother them. They say that. And that smoke would stay there and he would tell that old lady, "Look and see. See if they still sitting there." She said, "Yeah, they still sitting there." "Right now, he said, "Go ahead , they too bad, let them out. Get that wheel and give it to them. They too bad. Get them out. Tell them to go." So they like to give it to them. They too bad. Go they like to smother their own self. It got so bad, smoke in there. They couldn't breathe. Burn their eyes and their throat. They couldn't
