

days, because -) Now these copies of the Daily News that I published, maybe photographed. You'd have to enlarge them.

(That would be fine. They would be on microfilm.)

Yes. But they are supposed to have two copies. Now the sad part about the deal, after I sold out - I talk over the radio - I made the statement that the files had been destroyed. And, Oh, my friends just began to bring 'em in here by the arm loads, well, not in here. My office was over there on that corner. I got lots of them. Then another fire came along and burned it down.

(You lost even the copies your friends had brought to you?)

I have just a few copies right over here. They are old and I haven't looked at 'em in a long time.

(Well it is a good thing that you did send copies to the Historical Society.)

I can't read well enough -

(This issue - the Hugo Daily News - Wednesday December the 24th, 1947. This is the Christmas Eve paper.)

That was the Christmas Edition. Then this is a valuable copy right here.

I really don't have many - these are all I have. That is just about it.

(Well, before I come back to see you, I am going to go to the Historical building and look through - are there any copies that you remember that you'd like to have for your own records?)

No. There are so many that I wouldn't feel right to ask for copy of all of 'em.

Now there is just this one here isn't it?

(I believe that is the only Christmas edition there is here. Christmas issue 1937.)

I have some more there somewhere. I am not sure where they are.
