 We must tell the truth. Not make any false statements or false representation.
 Under oath, you might say, of that pipe. So those things are regulation to us.
 But I can work my way through statements, just so long as I don't violate openly the customary standards of Arapaho life. So, those things we gotta watch out for. Of course I have uncles that are part Cheyenne-Arapaho that participates in a lot of ceremonies of the Cheyennes. They have a right to tell. And they told me. That, I have right to tell, because they participated and they told me, and we have the relation(ship) and I got information from them. That's another Smithsonian Museum in Washington. I work with them and studied under a professor there. He's head of the Smithsonian for years. He was a professor of Ethnology at Georgetown University. He's dead now. Those things. And I'm writing a book of my own, too, on the Arapaho.

(When I talked to Mary (Poafpybitty) the other day, she said there was some book she'd asked you to get--?)

Oh, she asked me for a book on the Sand Creek Massacre of the Cheyennes in Colorado Territory. That was in 1864. And I told her that we used that in our case and I said, "It's in Washington. Yet with our attorney." Which I
