

New Mexico. But she's home. She had an interview with the State Superintendent (of Education), Dr. Hodge, last April, and she got a job in Oklahoma to teach now. And the second girl, she was an Office Clerk, secretary to the Southern Division of Internal Revenue at Dallas. But she came and this Concho Agency, they wanted her. So finally, she agreed to work with them. But that outfit, the Internal Revenue, they didn't want to let her go. They said they'd increase her pay but she told them, "Now," she said, "I really consider this on account of my mother and my father. They are getting along in years. They get sick and I want to be close to them." So they told her, "All right, we sure hate to give you up but if you ever want to come back, Bell, just let us know and you'll have an office job with higher pay. So those girls will be there (at Medicine Lodge). And they got a younger sister. She's a senior in El Reno High School. And they got two brothers that's graduated from high school, younger than those two oldest ones. They go to school up in Kansas. They're at home now. But they're taking special courses in Kansas. They graduated from high school in El Reno. And another daughter of mine's boy--he graduated high school at Weatherford. Now he's up in Kansas, taking summer jobs up there. But he's gonna go back with his cousin. They're taking special courses like drafting and electrical work and all that, you know. But now my three granddaughters, they got buckskin dresses. Like this cousin of mine--niece of mine--Arapaho style. And I got three sets of eagle feathers. One is American eagle. And one's a Mexican eagle--they're all white with black tips. And one is a Nebraska mountain hawk. (It looks like an eagle, but it's a hawk. But it's white with black tips with crossbars. And they all use them for fans. But they all dress like that. And I got a niece here--well, her mother's my niece--she's married to a white man. She lives here about four blocks south. She's got a buckskin costume same as this one--all uniform. Course, different patterns, but the style is all the same--beaded leggings, head bands, eagle feathers. And they all carry these Mexican
