

United States with the towns and states in. They don't even know where the United States is if you don't draw a map. Two great big high school kids out here not long ago. Yeah. (Unintelligible words) ((Laughter)) They couldn't put their hands on state of Oklahoma on outline of United States. ((Laughter)) I said, "Foot, I used to have to draw that without seeing." We had this map up - teacher draw up like a window shade. And she said "Now you study that." First going to be just outline of United States with all little coves and such things, you know, like bays and things like that on coast line. Then we study that for a while. Then she'd pull it down where all the states were outlined in there, no rivers or no nothing. See. Then we studied where the outline was. Then she would pull it down and there would be the rivers. Then she'd pull it down and the next one would have all the main, you know, like capitals, main cities. Then she'd take the thing out and we had to draw that. Believe you me, if you got San Frisco where San Diego supposed to be, then you got "F" on your report card.(((Laughter))) I used to get one - - you know, one time, there was a boy and a girl cheated like mad in school. I never did like anybody that cheats. So, (Unintelligible) and this teacher was a wonderful person. She was very fair and everything. You know, she always helped those kids. She helped anybody that asked her and she would have helped them if they'd asked her. They want to be big "I" you know. So they rather cheat than to ask for help. I, on purpose you know, I put the wrong capitals in and put Brazos River on Rio Grande along San Salvador or sumpin' else. ((Laughter)) I threw them down on the floor, which I knew better than to do that. See. Then I made excuse to leave the room. Well, at that time the teacher left, otherwise, I wouldn't have left. Anyway, I knew them kids would get that paper. See. Silly things. They didn't even look at that and copy it off. They traced it out.
