

and when you start making noise and moving around; it starts boiling. Pretty soon it just boils. I don't know--that's funny, the way they use that for--They get so many jars or something like that and fill it and take it home with them and wash their sores with it. They use it for medicine. Sometimes they get that mud around there. Get some of that mud and take it home and use it for sores. They don't do that anymore. Everything's different now.

Gotebo

This is an old town. These were all dry goods stores and grocery stores. It was a big town. There was lots of business. That was when the Rainy Mountain School was open yet. The Indians were all around here. They got per capita payments every month. That was from the government--from the grass land they had over at Randlett, I think, near the Red River. They gave the money out at the Rainy Mountain School. They all come into town. I think this was the drug store right here. They'd bring all the kids here in town and trade. Yeah, it's a real ghost town, now, Gotebo. These are old, old buildings. They been here long time.

Sugar Creek Church

This is that Sugar Creek Methodist Church. My son-in-law used to preach here. He stayed here about four or five years--Reuben. They moved him to Hobart from here. This must have been built in the 1930's. It's a Methodist Church. Delos Lone Wolf was preaching here first.

Scissortails

They roost around here (Rainy Mountain area) in them mesquites. In the olden days--wagon days--when they come along here they shoot them with shotguns. I don't know how they got them before they had shotguns. Arrows, I guess. But be pretty hard to hit, though.

Saddle Mountain Area: Church, Store, Cemetary, Etc.

Here's where the old Saddle Mountain store used to be. Lot of Kiowas used to live around here, too. I don't know who owned it, but they called it the Saddle Mountain Store. All the Indians around here used to come to this store--Auchiahş and Kokones. I don't know who ran the store--that was way back there. They all used to come and trade here. They had everything--dry goods and groceries and feed. Yeah, they gave credit. In olden days everybody got credit--all the Indians. They got checks pretty near every month. The store was built of those cobblestones--them round-looking stones. They get them around Mount Scott I think. I think the store went out of business around 1926 or 1927. They used to have gas pumps here, too.

And right along here there used to be another little filling station, but it didn't amount to nothing.

And this Saddle Mountain Church was built way back there. I guess it's about the oldest church. They tore it down. It was a Baptist Church. There's where it used to be sitting. The shade--the arbor--is still there. There used to be a spring up in here somewhere. A tornado hit it one year and just run that thing dry, they said. Suck all that water out. This Saddle Mountain Church was older than the Rainy Mountain Church. I think this was about the oldest church
