

It's starting out pretty good. But whenever our people puts a boy or girl through college, when they come out, they feel pretty lofty and look down on the rest of the Indians. That's what it is among us. That's the way it goes. It may change, I hope. We're getting a little money (claims settlement) and some of these kids are using it now. But they don't really go in for professions, like doctors or lawyers. They go more for teaching and business. I think the reason they don't go into the professional schools is they never had the training--they didn't prepare for that when they were in high school. That's what I think. Lots of times the Indians are awful in math. They don't pay much attention to math. That's the biggest obstacle. If you get a boy that's pretty good in math, they usually go to town.

INDIAN HOSPITALS AND HEALTH CARE

(Where do your daughter and her husband live?)

They live here in Clinton. Yes, this Clinton Indian Hospital is a good hospital. It's a Public Health Hospital--a good hospital. But, of course, it can't be as good as any city hospital. What I mean is, they don't have equipment. It's not equipped as a first-class hospital. They don't have a place where they perform surgery. They have a Public Health doctor there. They have to spend two years either in Public Health or in the army. They send them out here, and they come and go. They're pretty good, but just like I said, they don't have the full facilities of a hospital. In any bad sickness or surgery they can send them down here to the General Hospital here in Clinton, and do the surgery and then move them back up here to recuperate. The Public Health service pays for it. And some of them are sent down to Lawton--to that Indian Hospital
