

--he's twelve--and he's a little bit lazy. He likes to play.

Those are my daughter's children. My boy's children are small yet. (I think it's amazing that there was only one Indian student graduating last year.)

Yeah, but I don't know how many are in. More will graduate this year. And there's a lot more in junior high. It will be three or four years before they graduate. But those that have college degrees and stuff, instead of coming back and helping their people, they look down on them.

AN INDIAN TEACHER IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOL

We had a boy finish here and he went on to Southwestern. He got a degree in art, art and history. So this president of Southwestern used to be here--Al Harris. He used to help the Indians along. So he got him a position here at the high school as a teacher in art and history. He's a fullblood. But he just lasted one year. Then they sent him down to a southwest school there, back teaching second grade kids. And I was working down here--our office is down in the basement of the Post office. And I was thrown in there with white people. And some of the businessmen were down there in the Office time and time again. And they didn't guard their talk--they considered me as one of the group. Well, they brought this boy up. They said, "Well, there was ten strikes against him when he started teaching here, and I think things got so miserable that he moved back to--" His wife was from the Navajoes. She finished nursing (training) here, and they moved back. And now he's teaching out there at an Indian school. Yes, he was a Cheyenne.

(What do you mean by these "ten strikes against him"?)
