

That's cheap. And in a town like this--or any town--the real estate people stick together, like the gasoline people. Well, they have gas wars here sometimes--maybe one station will lower the gas and they always pretty nearly run him out of town!

(Are there many colored people in town here?)

Quite a few.

(Where do they live?)

They live on the southeast part. They're pretty bold. Pretty bold, now. When we go down to the other place, when we drive through--you have to drive through their town because the road goes out there on the east side and back--you can't go through there with any speed at there, because they'll be a bunch of them colored people coming right down the road, arm in arm. They ain't going to give way. You'll have to stop. In other words, they just dare you. And them little nigger kids will do the same thing. They're bold! They're bold all over.

(They didn't used to do that here, did they?)

No. No. They used to be good colored people till they brought this base (Clinton-Sherman AF Base) in here. They brought a lot of colored people from out east and they agitate this boldness into these down here.

(In a colored neighborhood are there people of other races living there too, or is it just all colored?)

It's just all colored.

(These Indians that marry Negroes--where do they live--would they have to go and live in a colored neighborhood or what?)

Yes. We don't have much of that here. And it's a funny thing, but the Indians don't mess around colored town. That's one good
