

up. Coming up is a little more work. A strain on the parts. But going down you can just roll it. Some places it's kind of a sharp curve, and a few tunnels. And they've got signs not to honk your horn or anything like that. Because that mountain could cave in on you, it says on that sign. Finally we almost got to the bottom of the mountain and there was a stream. I don't know what was the name of that river, and we got to Gray Bull. And we started back southwest, towards Riverton. There a lot of little towns. It's quite a ways. We got to Shoshone and then got to Landers. It was four o'clock in the morning. I never slept since Calgary, doing all that driving. When we got over there, John was telling us--Of course, John Fletcher was there before--he was telling the Old Man about that sulphur spring down there for Indians. So we took a little time out there. I slept about two hours in the car, right on the side of the road. John Fletcher and the Old Man, you know, they get all the sleep they want while we're driving.

STOP AT WIND RIVER RESERVATION IN WYOMING TO BATHE IN HOT
SULPHUR SPRING

After I woke up--we were in a town. We eat breakfast. I asked them which way. They said, "You go this way--north--towards Fort Washakie. Before you get there a mile on this side is a filling station. Then you go east several miles. On the north side of the road is a sulphur spring. It's built for the public. Indians free. (Referring to a natural hot springs area which has been made into public bath and swimming facility and operated by the Shoshone and Arapaho tribes of the Wind River Reservation. Indians are admitted free and non-Indians are charged 50 cents to bathe or swim.--jj) So we started down that way and we got over there. Sure enough they got a--looked like a tourist camp. That building's built like a tourist camp. And a caretaker lives on the west side of that place. So we went over there and get a permit, and let him know that we're there. All we paid for was towels. Towels and soap. So, it's private--kind of booths, like. (Individual bath compartments) It's got a shower and it's got a tub, and it's got a place where you walk in that water. And where you
