

(What kind of gambling did they do? What kind of games did they gamble at?)

Games? Well, a lot of Indians used their own games. But there was--there was these card games we call "monte" games. They learned those from the soldiers. But there were lot of Indian gambling games. (Looks for a picture) There's horse racing games. They gamble on running horses. Bet on horses. Then they have a wood game. They have five sticks marked (Stick Game) and they throw them up there and they got a scoreboard and a paper. And as many as four or eight could play. And they play for money, or they play for horses, or saddle, or blanket or whatever they-- But in those games they have to partner up. Unless just two of them plays. Then if four of them plays, they have' to have partners, too. Two apiece. And--

(Did just men play that game?)

I have a set but I left it over there with my daughter, Helen. She's got it over there. She wanted to make a copy of it.

(Did just men play that game?)

Men? Sometimes. But it's mostly a women's game. It's mostly women's game. Then the womens played shinny for money and the men play arrow games for money.

ARROW GAMES PLAYED BY MEN

Well, there's different ways of playing arrow games. They shoot at a targets. And a plaited rawhide, about big as this pencil, and about that long, and it was limber. They put it over their fingers like that. And they put that rawhide over the arrow like that. And they have a bow and let it slide down. And after it
