

is bleeding. They put that on there. It stops the blood that quick (claps his hands).

(What is this cobweb like?)

Well, it's just a cobweb that covers quite a bit of space. You can just gather it easy. It's a spider's web, is what it is, but it's kind of like what you find on these plum bushes. Same nature. Or you can get these webworm (webs) on plum bushes. It's the same thing that applies. That's number two. Number three is this soft plume--feather--they put it mostly on the face or neck or upper body. It's cleaner, you know. That stops the blood too.

(What kind of a bird?)

Oh, eagle. Mostly eagle. Those three things they use to stop blood with.

(Is there an Arapaho name for this mushroom--that has the powdery stuff on the inside?)

No--not that I know of--let's see-- h^w.kuh^w

(Does that have any meaning?)

Not that I know of. I just know the name. But I know what they use it for. That's an old mushroom ball--you know how it dries and fluffy--when you step on it, it falls to pieces.

(Is there a name for this cobweb?)

It's "spider trap", they call it-- -n^wy^w.t -- nihi^wθ^woun^wy^w.t

You know, we call spiders the same as your race--white people.

nihi^wθ^w is a spider. Why? Because he does a lot of miraculous things--like this space--things that white men do that are miraculous. And because a spider does those things--with his web, you know, maybe we got that name from a spider and we named white
