

(Do you know whether your mother-in-law gave her any kind of medicine?)

Yes, she gave tea and I forgot what else it was I heard she gave her--(pause)--I don't know whether it was a rock or whether it was mineral--I forgot what it was. But anything she told her to keep it in her mouth and keep swallowing saliva down her throat. Something like that.

(Do you know if your mother-in-law used any other equipment--like rattle, or anything like that?)

No, no, no.

(Did women doctors ever use rattles or anything like that?)

No, they never did.

(What kind of things did they use?)

Well, they usually prayed and they used a black handkerchief--a black silk handkerchief, and paint--this vermilion that they used to pulverize and paint their faces with. Those are the only things that I know of that they used.

(Did they ever use feathers?)

No, no feathers.

(Where did the Arapahoes get their vermilion paint?)

Up in the Colorado mountains.

(End of Side A)

(Side B is genealogical information and is not transcribed.)